QUESTION PRESENTED

Did the Court of Appeals err in concluding that respondents have standing to challenge a state statute on Establishment Clause grounds where respondents did not show that they have personally suffered any actual or threatened injury as a result of the statute?

PARTIES

Petitioner Larry D. Jackson, defendant below, is Director of the Department of Social Services of the Commonwealth of Virginia. He is responsible for administration and enforcement of Virginia Code § 63.1-196.3, which exempts church-affiliated child care centers from compulsory licensing required of most (but not all) other child care centers in Virginia.

Petitioners Grace Baptist Church, Tabernacle Baptist Church, Berean Baptist Church and the Rock Church (the "churches") are churches that operate child care centers and that have elected not to be licensed, as permitted by § 63.1-196.3. The churches intervened as defendants pursuant to an invitation of the Court of Appeals in an earlier decision remanding the case to the District Court. See Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d 230, 245-47 (4th Cir. 1984). The churches are representatives of a defendant class of religious institutions that operate child-care centers exempted from licensure by § 63.1-196.3

Respondents Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc., Academy Day Care, Inc., and Holloman Child Care Centers, Inc., plaintiffs below and petitioners in No. 88-730, are child care centers that are not eligible for licensure exemption under § 63.1-196.3 or otherwise.

Shenandoah Baptist Church and its pastor, Robert L. Alderman, intervened as defendants but were dismissed from the case after they "opted out" of the defendant class. They are not parties to this proceeding.

CROSS-PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion at issue is Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Grace Baptist Church, 846 F.2d 260 (4th Cir. 1988) ("Forest Hills IV"), and is reprinted as Appendix A to this Cross-Petition (App. 1a). The Court of Appeals denied respondents' Petition for Rehearing in an Order reprinted as Appendix E (App. 121a). An earlier opinion of the Court of Appeals addressing the issue of standing is Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, No. 80-1272 (4th Cir. Jan. 9, 1981) (unpublished) ("Forest Hills I"), reprinted as Appendix B (App. 10a). The opinion of the District Court that was reversed by the Court of Appeals in Forest Hills IV is reprinted as Appendix C (App. 14a) and reported at 661 F. Supp. 300 (E.D. Va. 1987). The final order of the District Court dismissing the case with prejudice, following the Fourth Circuit's decision in Forest Hills IV, is reprinted as Appendix D (App. 120a).

Other reported opinions in this case, listed chronologically, are published at 487 F. Supp. 1378 (E.D. Va. 1980); 540 F. Supp. 1046 (E.D. Va. 1982); 728 F.2d 230 (4th Cir. 1984) ("Forest Hills II"); and 789 F.2d 295 (4th Cir. 1986) ("Forest Hills III"). A copy of an unpublished judgment of the District Court dated January 17, 1985, has been lodged with the Clerk of the Court.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on May 6, 1988. Respondents' petition for rehearing was denied on August 3, 1988. Respondents' Petition for a Writ of Certiorari was docketed on November 1, 1988, and received on November 2, 1988. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc., et al. v. Larry D. Jackson, et al., No. 88-730. This Cross-Petition is filed in reliance on Rule 19.5 of this Court. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Article III, Section 2 of the United States Constitution provides, in pertinent part, "The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution. . . ."

Amendment I of the United States Constitution provides, in pertinent part, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

STATUTE INVOLVED

Virginia Code § 63.1-196.3 is reprinted at App. 44a, as Appendix A to the decision of the District Court dated May 15, 1987, which is reprinted as Appendix C to this Cross-Petition.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is a civil action by three operators of licensed child care centers against the Director of the Virginia Department of Social Services (petitioner Jackson), seeking a declaration that Virginia Code § 63.1-196.3 is unconstitutional and an injunction against its enforcement. Section 63.1-196.3 allows child care centers operated under the auspices of a religious institution, at their option, to be exempt from State licensure, which is required of most (but not all) other child care centers in Virginia.

In Forest Hills I, decided in January 1981, the Court of Appeals vacated a judgment dismissing the action for want of standing[1] and remanded for further proceedings. App. 10a. The Court of Appeals noted that plaintiffs "claim only financial harm" and held that "submission of the proffered evidence and the particulars of the secular centers' actual financial loss, if any, would be appropriate before a decision about standing is made." App. 12a.

On remand, plaintiffs filed an Amended Complaint and affidavits designed to show their "actual financial loss" resulting from the statute. They asserted in those papers that they "have suffered competitive injury and continue to suffer competitive injury" as a consequence of the exemption statute. Their contention is that unlicensed status allows churches to operate at lower costs and charge lower fees.

The State again moved to dismiss for lack of standing, and both sides moved for summary judgment. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss but grated the State's motion for summary judgment. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 540 F. Supp. 1046 (E.D. Va. 1982). The Court of Appeals vacated the summary judgment and remanded for further proceedings. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d 230 (4th Cir. 1984) ("Forest Hills II"). No question of standing was raised in Forest Hills II. Id. at 233 n.1.

Following the remand in Forest Hills II, the petitioner churches were allowed to intervene as representatives of a defendant class. After further proceedings in both the District Court and the Court of Appeals, trial was held on March 9, 1987.

[1] Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 487 F. Supp. 1378 (E.D. Va. 1980).

Plaintiff-respondents elected to present no evidence that they had been injured by the statute, although they were warned repeatedly in the months preceding trial that petitioner-defendants denied their allegations of injury and would prove the contrary. Respondents presented no evidence, for example, that churches charge lower fees than commercial centers or that families have enrolled children in unlicensed centers because of lower fees, much less that exemption from licensure has allowed churches to lower their fees. As a result, there is simply no competent evidence to permit a finding that the statute has had any economic impact on plaintiffs.

There is, however, substantial evidence that plaintiffs are not injured by the exemption. As to cost-competitiveness, each of the churches' representatives testified that its child care center is subsidized by the church itself. Scholarships are provided for needy children; facilities, utilities, maintenance and janitorial services are provided; church staff are shared with the child care centers; and direct financial support has come from the churches' general revenues. None of these factors results from the exemption statute. The churches' child care centers, unlike respondents' commercial centers, are not operated for a profit.[2] Moreover, the churches' witnesses testified generally that they comply with all of the State's regulations that they do not oppose on religious grounds, and there has been no contention that any of the objectionable provisions has any effect on costs.

In fact, exemption in some respects entails higher costs, as churches are required by the statute to meet more demanding staff-to-child ratios than licensed centers. By accepting the exemption, churches also forego several competitive advantages, including the ability to obtain government subsidies[3] and provider training and to represent to parents that a center is licensed (and thus approved) by the State. Finally, the evidence rather directly refutes respondents' claim that the religious exemption has crippled the commercial centers, as the number of licensed centers in Virginia has increased at a rate almost five times greater than that of the pre-school population during the period of the exemption, and twice as rapidly as in the several years preceding its enactment.

On May 15, 1987, the District Court issued an opinion and order declaring the statute unconstitutional and enjoining its enforcement. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 661 F. Supp. 300 (E.D. Va. 1987), reprinted at Appendix C (App. 14a). The District Court held that the issue of plaintiff-respondents' standing had been "resolved in an earlier stage of the proceedings, " in Forest Hills II. App. 25a. The District Court recognized that the question of standing was not raised in that appeal, but it reasoned that "that Court would not have been willing to grant summary judgment for the plaintiffs [absent intervention by the defendant class of churches] had the standing issue not been resolved in plaintiffs' favor." App. 26a.

The Court of Appeals held that plaintiff-respondents had standing to sue on a different ground. It held that the "facts and positions of the parties in the present case are closely analogous to those in Arkansas Writers' Project [v. Ragland, No.85-1370, ____ U.S. ____, 107 S.Ct. 1722 (1987)], and the same principle must govern." App. 5a. The Court of Appeals went on to hold the statute constitutional, applying this Court's decisions in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971), and in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop v. Amos, Nos. 86-179, 86-401, 483 U.S. ____, 107 S.Ct. 2862 (1987).

ARGUMENT

Summary of Argument

This case presents the question whether a party who is subject to a state licensing requirement from which other parties are statutorily exempt may challenge the exemption as an unconstitutional establishment of religion, absent any evidence of actual injury resulting from his different statutory treatment. Petitioners respectfully submit that the Court of Appeals' holding that respondents have standing to sue is an unjustified extension of the Arkansas Writers' Project decision to an entirely different factual situation, and one that requires correction to resolve an actual conflict among the several courts of appeals and to prevent improper extensions of standing to parties who have not suffered injury, in violation of Article III (part I). Petitioners further submit that this Court should review and reverse the Court of Appeals' ruling on the ground that plaintiffs' alleged economic injuries do not satisfy the prudential "zone of interests" test for standing to raise an Establisment Clause question (part II).

I. Constitutional grounds

The concept of standing is part of Article III's "fundamental" limitation of federal court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies. E.g., Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976). "[A]t an irreducible minimum, Art. III requires the party who invokes the court's authority to 'show that he personally has suffered some actual or threatened injury as a result of the putatively illegal conduct of the defendant.' " Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 472 (1982), quoting Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441 U.S. 91, 99 (1979). This limitation is especially important where plaintiffs ask a court to invalidate a legislative act. Rigorous application of the requirement of standing in this context furthers the important and longstanding federal policy of avoiding unnecessary constitutional adjudications, thus preventing acrimonious confrontations between federal courts and the States or other branches of the federal government. See, e.g., Valley Forge, supra, 454 U.S. at 473-74; Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 221-22 (1974). If a federal court is asked to void a state statute, in short, it should be very certain that the party seeking relief is genuinely injured by the enactment at issue.

This Court (in at least four cases[4]) and numerous decisions of other courts of appeals[5] have held that allegations of standing, if denied, must be proved in a preliminary evidentiary hearing or at trial. The Court of Appeals' decision, relying on Arkansas Writers' Project, fails to address the core rationale of those decisions.

Arkansas Writers' Project involved a First Amendment challenge to "a state sales tax scheme that taxes general interest magazines, but exempts newspapers and religious, professional, trade, and sports journals." ___ U.S. at ___, 107 S.Ct. at 1724. The appellant, a publisher of a general interest magazine, sought a refund of sales taxes paid, relying on this Court's decision in Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minnesota Comm'r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575 (1983). The parties stipulated that the appellant had paid over $15,000 in sales taxes during the relevant period. ___ U.S. at ___, 107 S.Ct. at 1725. In this Court, the State challenged the appellant's standing on the ground that its injury would not be redressed by a decision in its favor. This Court rejected that argument, noting that numerous of its decisions have considered "claims that others similarly situated were exempt from the operation of a state law adversely affecting the claimant." Id. at ____, 107 S.Ct. at 1726 (emphasis added). It held that "appellant has alleged sufficient a personal stake in the outcome of this litigation. 'The holding of the [Arkansas] cour[t] stand[s] as a total bar to appellant's relief; [its] constitutional attack holds the only promise of escape from the burden that derives from the challenged statut[e].' " Id. at ____, 107 S.Ct. at 1726 (emphasis added), quoting Orr v. Orr, 440 U.S. 268, 273 (1979).

In Arkansas Writers' Project, the adverse effect or burden was stipulated. The appellant was directly impacted by the differing statutory treatment; it had paid over $15,000 in sales taxes that a similarly-situated professional or sports magazine had avoided. The issue in that case was whether the appellant lacked standing because a successful challenge might not relieve the conceded burden of taxation. ____ U.S. at ____, 107 S.Ct. at 1726; see Orr v. Orr, 440 U.S. at 271-73. In this case, petitioners have never stipulated that respondents are adversely affected by the different statutes applicable to their child care centers, and petitioners presented substantial evidence to the contrary at the trial. Unlike the appellant in Arkansas Writers' Project, respondents here rely on an entirely indirect alleged impact of the exemption. They have alleged but not proved that petitioners' licensure exemption allows them to operate at lower costs and to charge lower fees, and that respondents are thereby placed at a competitive disadvantage. That is a far cry from the substantial, direct impact of state taxation involved in the Arkansas Writers' Project case. Thus the issue here is whether the plaintiffs are adversely affected at all, not whether invalidation of the statute will remove a conceded adverse effect.

In short, respondents have established only that they are treated differently than petitioners. No evidence demonstrates that they are treated less favorably. Petitioners respectfully submit that the Court should grant this Cross-Petition to correct the Court of Appeals' unwarranted extension of the Arkansas Writers' Project decision, to prevent uncritical acceptance of federal judicial challenges to state statutes by parties unable to demonstrate any injury resulting from such statutes, and to resolve the conflict between the Fourth Circuit's decision in this case and numerous contrary rulings of this Court and other courts of appeals.

II. Prudential grounds

Beyond the requirements of Article III, this Court has developed a series of "prudential" limitations on standing. These include the requirement "that the plaintiff's complaint fall within 'the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional guarantee in question.' " Valley Forge Christian College, supra, 454 U.S. at 475, quoting Association of Data Processing Service Orgs., Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970).

Plaintiffs' alleged economic injuries manifestly are not arguably within the "zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the . . . constitutional guarantee in question," the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. That Clause was adopted to "ensur[e] governmental neutrality in matters of religion." Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 449 (1971); see also, e.g., Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 669 (1970). Plaintiffs seek to avoid "competitive injury," not to promote religious neutrality or freedom. Cf. McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 430-31 (1961) (persons prosecuted for violating Sunday closing law had standing to challenge law under Establishment Clause, under circumstances of "direct economic injury, allegedly due to the imposition on them of the tenets of the Christian religion").[6]

The Court of Appeals did not address petitioners' arguments with respect to the "zone of interests" standard. Petitioners respectfully submit that this Court should grant this Cross-Petition to consider application of that test to challenges to legislation based on the Establishment Clause.

[6] Unlike the Sunday closing law in McGowan, the exemption statute here does not impose religious beliefs on anyone. Respondents have never alleged the contrary.

CONCLUSION

In that event that respondents' Petition for Certiorari is granted, the Court also should grant this Cross-Petition to consider whether respondents have standing to assert their constitutional challenge.

Argued Feb. 4, 1988.

Decided May 6, 1988.

Before RUSSELL and HALL, Circuit Judges, and BUTZNER, Senior Circuit Judge.

BUTZNER, Senior Circuit Judge:

This challenge to the constitutionality of Virginia's exemption of religiously affiliated child care centers from state licensing requirements has been before this court on several occasions. See Forest Hills Early Learning Center v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d 230 (4th Cir.1984); Forest Hills Early Learning Center v. Lukhard, 789 F.2d 295 (4th Cir.1986). Acting on the basis of our earlier instructions, the district court conscientiously reviewed the various requirements of the licensing statute and held that compliance with them would not impermissibly burden the churches' free exercise rights. Consequently, the court concluded that the statute exempting the churches from obtaining licenses and from complying with regulations governing child care centers violates the establishment clause of the first amendment. Forest Hills Early Learning Center v. Lukhard, 661 F.Supp. 300 (E.D.Va.1987). Because the Supreme Court's recent decision in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos, —— U.S. ——, 107 S.Ct. 2862, 97 L.Ed.2d 273 (1987), requires an analysis different from that which we previously employed, we reverse the judgment of the district court and hold the challenged statute to be constitutional.

I

The background of this dispute has been set forth in detail in our earlier opinion in this case. Forest Hills, 728 F.2d at 233-37. A brief review will suffice for the present discussion.

The state of Virginia since 1948 has required all child care center operators to obtain a license, and to comply with certain basic standards. In 1976 the Department of Welfare promulgated new and substantially broader and more stringent regulations, setting detailed mandatory standards concerning, among other areas, programs, space, health, nutrition, disciplinary practices, and parental participation. Spurred to examine their positions by this more intensive regulation and by news of related controversies in other states, some churches informed state authorities that their religious beliefs could not permit them to apply for or accept a state license to carry out a function they consider an integral part of their religious ministry. In response to these concerns, the Virginia legislature enacted Va. Code § 63.1-196.3, which exempts child care centers operated by religious institutions, at their option, from licensing and compliance with many regulations. Exempt centers must still meet basic health and safety standards.

The appellees are child care centers without religious affiliations. They allege that the exemption of religious centers from licensing requirements places secular centers at a competitive disadvantage, and that they have suffered actual injury as a result of this effect.

II

The churches contend that the secular child care centers lack standing to challenge the constitutionality of the exemption because they have introduced no evidence, beyond assertions, that they have suffered actual economic injury as a result of the exemption of religious centers. The district court ruled that the secular centers had demonstrated sufficient injury to establish standing. 661 F.Supp. at 307-08.

The Supreme Court's decision last term in Arkansas Writers' Project v. Ragland, — U.S. ——, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 95 L.Ed.2d 209 (1987), supports the secular centers' claim of standing. In that case a publisher whose magazine was subject to the general state sales tax brought suit challenging the constitutionality of a sales tax exemption granted to certain types of magazines. The Court held that the plaintiff did have standing to bring that challenge, pointing to "the numerous decisions of this Court in which we have considered claims that others similarly situated were exempt from the operation of a state law adversely affecting the claimant." 107 S.Ct. at 1726. The facts and positions of the parties in the present case are closely analogous to those in Arkansas Writers' Project, and the same principle must govern.

III

Our earlier analysis of the statutory exemption was guided by the three-prong test for establishment clause violations articulated in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971). The Supreme Court's decision last term in Amos adheres to the Lemon test, but explains and clarifies it in ways which require us to revise our analysis.

At issue in Amos was a statute specifically exempting religious organizations from the ban on religious discrimination imposed on all other employers by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The plaintiff was a building engineer employed in a gymnasium run as a nonprofit facility open to the public by entities connected with the Mormon Church. He was fired when he failed to qualify as a member in good standing of that church. The district court held that the exemption violated the establishment clause.

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Court employed the Lemon test for distinguishing between permissible accommodations and unconstitutional establishments of religion: "First, the statute must have a secular legislative purpose; second, its principal or primary effect must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion, . . . finally, the statute must not foster 'an excessive government entanglement with religion.'" Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S.Ct. at 2111. The Court held that the exemption of religious employers from Title VII's mandate passed each of the elements of the Lemon test. In reaching its conclusion, it emphasized that "'[t]he limits of permissible state accommodation to religion are by no means co-extensive with the noninterference mandated by the Free Exercise Clause.'" Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2867, quoting Walz v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 673, 90 S.Ct.1409, 1413, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970).

The Court held it a permissible and sufficient legislative purpose "to alleviate significant governmental interference with the ability of religious organizations to define and carry out their religious missions." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2868. The government interference to be avoided includes both positive statutory mandates to which a religious group would have to conform its practices, and the "significant burden on a religious organization" caused by forcing it to defend its beliefs and practices in extended free exercise litigation before "a judge [who may] not understand its religious tenets and sense of mission." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2868.

The potential for just the sorts of burdens the Court is concerned with is very clear in the present case. Absent the exemption, some church leaders would immediately be forced to violate their convictions against submitting aspects of their ministries to state licensing, or face legal action by the state. This would be an unseemly clash of church and state which the legislature might well wish to avoid. Our earlier opinion shifted to the churches the initial burden of producing evidence "to establish the extent, if any, of their free exercise rights in the exempted activities." See Forest Hills, 728 F.2d at 246. As a result, they have already been put to the difficult and intrusive burden of attempting to persuade a secular court of the sincerity and centrality of the beliefs they consider threatened by government licensing.

The interference that the Supreme Court sought to avoid is apparent in an approach which permitted the district court to declare that "while the [churches] may characterize this activity as a part of their ministries, the Court is not bound to accept this characterization," and to conclude that "operation of child care centers by these sectarian institutions is a secular, and not religious, activity." Forest Hills, 661 F.Supp. at 309. The district court, noting that child care centers in general are relatively recent phenomena, suggested that "sectarian groups, in establishing day care centers, were responding to secular economic need rather than expanding the scope of their ministries." 661 F.Supp. at 309. But religious groups have throughout history reshaped their ministries to respond to changed circumstances. Amos clarifies that it is a legitimate legislative purpose to avoid interference with the execution of religious missions in a nonprofit area in which a church operates, without reference to the role played by churches in the past.*

Addressing the requirement that a law must have a "principal or primary effect . . . that neither advances nor inhibits religion," Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612, 91 S.Ct. at 2111, the Court distinguished laws such as those invalidated in Lemon which positively aid, endorse, and advance religion, from laws which, by adopting a hands-off policy, leave the way open for churches to advance their own teachings. "A law is not unconstitutional simply because it allows churches to advance religion, which is their very purpose. For a law to have forbidden 'effects' under Lemon, it must be fair to say that the government itself has advanced religion through its own activities and influence." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2868-69. Virginia in exempting religious child care centers from its licensing

* The Supreme Court has not decided whether the state may as readily exempt for-profit operations of religious groups from otherwise applicable regulations. Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2873 (Blackmun, J., concurring) and 2875 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

requirement, cannot be said to be "advanc[ing] religion through its own activities and influence." On the contrary, we believe that "the objective observer should perceive [this exemption] as an accommodation of the exercise of religion rather than as a government endorsement of religion." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2875 (O'Connor, J., concurring). The fact that this accommodation may make the churches' task marginally easier than it would be were no exemption given, the Supreme Court has indicated, is of no moment. Nor does a regulatory statute's singular exemption of religious groups render its purpose suspect: "Where, as here, government acts with the proper purpose of lifting a regulation that burdens the exercise of religion, we see no need to require that the exemption comes packaged with benefits to secular entities." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2869.

Finally, the Court held that exemptions such as those challenged in Amos and in the present case actually lessen the risk of entanglement between church and state. The burdensome issue-by-issue free exercise litigation that would be necessary absent a general exemption "results in considerable ongoing government entanglement in religious affairs." Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2872. (Brennan, J., concurring). This would both chill and interfere with religious groups, enmeshing judges in intrusive and sometimes futile attempts to understand the contours, sincerity, and centrality of the religious beliefs of others. Amos, 107 S.Ct. at 2870 (opinion of the Court) and 2872 (Brennan, J., concurring).

In sum, applying to these nonprofit facilities the Lemon test as now explained by Amos, we do not discern any distinctions that would justify a result in this case different from that reached in Amos. Indeed, if an exemption is permissible in the context of employment practices in a gymnasium, one can only be more solidly justified where it acts to prevent state interference with church programs that provide education and care for children.

IV

Our decision on the merits renders moot the appeal of Shenandoah Baptist Church from an order dismissing it from the case.

Since the appellees are no longer the prevailing party within the meaning of the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976, 42 U.S.C. § 1988, we vacate the district court's award of attorney's fees.

The judgment of the district court declaring Va. Code § 63.1-196.3 unconstitutional is reversed, and the injunction it issued is dissolved.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Richmond
D. Dortch Warriner, Judge

Argued December 4, 1980 Decided January 9, 1981

Before BUTZNER, RUSSELL and HALL, Circuit Judges.

John E. Heintz (John Vanderstar, Covington and Burling on brief) for appellants; John A. Rupp (Marshall Coleman, Attorney General of Virginia, Martin A. Dolan, Jr., Gregory M. Luce, Assistant Attorneys General on brief) for appellee.

PER CURIAM:

Three secular child care centers appeal from an order of the district court dismissing their complaint against the Director of the Virginia Department of Welfare for lack of standing. They challenge the constitutionality of Virginia Code § 63.1-196.3, which exempts child care centers "operated or conducted under the auspices of a religious institution" from some state licensing standards. They allege that because of the costs imposed on them by the licensing regulations to which they are subject, they cannot compete with the rates charged by the exempt centers. The religious centers, they assert, charge low rates because the exemption reduces operating and fixed costs.

The district court ruled that the secular centers had failed to show that they have or will suffer injury as a result of the exemption. It also held that res judicata required dismissal of the action because an earlier complaint had been dismissed for lack of standing and the second complaint was indistinguishable from the first. We vacate the district court's judgment and remand in order that secular centers may amend their complaint.

Res judicata is not a bar to this action. The first complaint alleged only anticipated injury. The second complaint, in contrast, alleged actual injury because of loss of customers to newly opened exempt centers. These allegations are sufficient to show that the two complaints do not involve the same facts pertaining to standing. A dismissal for lack of standing is a dismissal for lack of jurisdiction. Data Processing Service v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 151 (1970). It does not bar pursuit of the same claim if the jurisdictional defect can be overcome. See 5 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1350 at 554 (1969).

In order to establish standing, however, the secular centers need to allege "specific, concrete facts demonstrating that the challenged practices harm" them and that they "personally would benefit in a tangible way from the court's intervention." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 508 (1975). Although the secular centers alleged loss of customers to newly opened exempt centers, their allegations of injury were generalized and conclusory. In opposing the motion to dismiss their complaint, however, the secular centers offered to submit proof showing that, after an exempt center charging lower rates opened in the neighborhood, a nearby secular center had its smallest enrollment in eight years of operation.

The secular centers claim only financial harm, and they insist that they have sufficiently alleged a cause of action under the rules of notice pleading. We conclude, however, that submission of the proffered evidence and the particulars of the secular centers' actual financial loss, if any, would be appropriate before a decision about standing is made.* If the proposed amendment to the complaint alleges facts from which it reasonably may be inferred that the exemption, coupled with the regulations, has caused the secular centers monetary injury and that there is a substantial probability that the relief they seek will redress their loss, the district court should accord them standing and proceed to the merits of the case. If they cannot make these allegations, the district court may dismiss their complaint. Warth, 422 U.S. at 504 and 508.

* In Warth, 422 U.S. at 501-02, the Court stated:

> For purposes of ruling on a motion to dismiss for want of standing, both the trial and reviewing courts must accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party. . . . At the same time, it is within the trial court's power to allow or to require the plaintiff to supply, by amendment to the complaint or by affidavits, further particularized allegations of fact deemed supportive of plaintiff's standing. If, after this opportunity, the plaintiff's standing does not adequately appear from all materials of record, the complaint must be dismissed.

Accordingly, we vacate the judgment of the district court and remand for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

VACATED AND REMANDED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

RICHARD L. WILLIAMS, District Judge.

This matter is before the Court following a remand by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Plaintiffs are nonsectarian operators of child care centers. They brought this action challenging the constitutionality of Virginia's statutory exemption of religiously affiliated child care centers from the general licensing requirements imposed upon the operation of such centers by the Commonwealth. The action is nominally against the named Director of the Department of Social Services in his official capacity. The complaint seeks a declaration that the exemption is unconstitutional and injunctive relief compelling general application of the child care licensing provisions to all child care centers irrespective of religious affiliation. Defendant-intervenors Grace Baptist Church, Tabernacle Baptist Church, Berean Baptist Church and The Rock Church represent a class of sectarian operators of child care centers that intervened to demonstrate the existence of free exercise rights in the exempted activities. For the reasons stated below, the Court concludes that the exemption statute, Va.Code § 63.1-196.3, violates the establishment clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and enters judgment in favor of the plaintiffs.

Procedural History

Plaintiffs Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc., Academy Day Care, Inc., and Holloman Child Care Centers, Inc. filed their original complaint against William Lukhard in his official capacity in 1979. United States District Judge Warriner held that, because the secular centers' claims of injury were pure speculation, they had no standing to sue. 480 F.Supp. 636 (E.D.Va. 1979). Plaintiffs filed a second complaint in 1980, alleging "substantial injury" but the District Court again held that plaintiffs lacked standing to sue. 487 F.Supp. 1378 (E.D.Va.1980). That decision was appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit which held dismissal on that basis erroneous and remanded for further consideration of the standing issue on an expanded record. Forest Hills Early Learning Center,

Inc. v. Lukhard, No. 80-1272 (4th Cir. Jan. 9, 1981) (unpublished), listed at 642 F.2d 448. On remand, the District Court denied defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of standing but granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. 540 F.Supp. 1046 (E.D.Va. 1982). The District Court held: (1) the exemption statute had a secular legislative purpose; (2) the statute's primary effect was not to advance religion; (3) the statute did not foster excessive government entanglement with religion; (4) the statute did not violate the establishment clause; and (5) the statute did not violate the equal protection clause.

The plaintiffs appealed the judgment of the District Court to the Court of Appeals. The Fourth Circuit affirmed in part, vacated in part, and remanded to the District Court. 728 F.2d 230 (4th Cir.1984). The Fourth Circuit held that the Commonwealth of Virginia failed to establish the existence of free exercise rights justifying the exemption as an accommodation of free exercise rights. The Fourth Circuit noted that the accommodation of free exercise rights could provide a "saving 'secular purpose' for the exemption under establishment clause challenge." 728 F.2d at 241. The Fourth Circuit suggested class intervention of sectarian institutions to allow an efficient adjudication of the existence of any free exercise rights in the exempted activities, but instructed the District Court that if class intervention did not occur, it should enter judgment declaring the statute unconstitutional. Id. at 247.

On remand, the District Court denied class certification and entered summary judgment for the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Fourth Circuit stated that the District Court "misapprehended the purport of our decision and nullified entirely the purposes of a remand herein," necessitating return to the District Court once more "for the purposes stated in our earlier opinion herein." [1] 789 F.2d 295 (4th Cir.1986).

Factual Background [2]

The Commonwealth of Virginia has regulated all child care centers since at least 1948 by requiring these centers to meet certain licensing standards. From 1968 to 1979, all persons who operated child care centers, without regard to sectarian or non-sectarian affiliation, were required to comply with the licensing requirements of Va. Code §§ 63.1-195 through 63.1-219 and the regulations promulgated thereunder. An applicant for a license under these provisions was required to submit an application to the Commissioner of the Department of Welfare [3] containing an outline of the center's proposed activities, facilities and services, § 63.1-197; the Commissioner was then required to investigate the applicant's proposal and to inquire into the character, reputation and financial responsibility of the applicant, § 63.1-198. The applicant was required to grant the Commissioner reasonable opportunity to inspect its facilities, books and records and to interview its employees and agents. Id.

If the Commissioner found that the applicant's operation was reasonably conducive to the welfare of the children it might serve and that the applicant's financial responsibility gave reasonable assurance of continued maintenance of its operation, the Commissioner was to issue a license, § 63.1-199. The Commissioner retained the right to inspect the center and to interview any employee or customer of the center at reasonable times, § 63.1-210. In

[1] On remand, the case was transferred to United States District Judge Richard L. Williams, due to the death of Judge Warriner.

[2] Much of this factual background is taken from the Fourth Circuit's opinion at 728 F.2d 230, 233-36.

[3] The name of the Department of Welfare changed to Department of Social Services in 1984.

addition to complying with these statutory requirements, a person seeking a license for operating a center had to comply with regulations drawn up by the State Board of Welfare that prescribe general standards and policies for the operation of child care centers. See § 63.1-202.

During the early 1970's, the number of child care centers in Virginia increased significantly to meet the rising demand for outside-the-home child day care. As the number of centers increased, the Virginia Department of Welfare received numerous complaints that many of the centers were providing inadequate facilities, meals and supervision. Based upon an investigation, the Department determined that many centers were sacrificing the best interests of the children in order to maintain financial stability and to offer competitive prices. The Department further determined that many parents never visited a center before they enrolled their children there and that decisions concerning the choice of a center were often made without any parental knowledge or information about the centers.

The Department thereupon concluded that the regulations concerning licensing and operation should be upgraded to insure that the pressures of a competitive marketplace did not intrude upon the well-being of children utilizing the service of a center. In 1976, the State Board promulgated new and more stringent regulations. These regulations imposed substantial requirements on all child care centers in many areas, including space, health, safety, and nutritional standards, child/staff ratios, administrative structure, staff applications, parental participation, recordkeeping, program requirements, financial disclosure, disciplinary practices and others.

These standards were adopted in 1976 and applied to all child care centers, as had been the practice with prior regulations in the area. After the regulations were implemented a number of churches that operated child care centers opined to the Commissioner of the Virginia Department of Welfare, William L. Lukhard, that the new licensing requirements infringed their right freely to exercise their religious beliefs. In response to these complaints the Virginia legislature enacted Va.Code § 63.1-196.3, which exempts all "[c]hild care center[s] operated or conducted under the auspices of . . . religious institution[s]" from compliance with the licensing requirements of § 63.1-196. Those requirements remained fully applicable to all nonsectarian child care centers, and, by express statutory provision, to any sectarian centers whose sponsors nevertheless elect to be covered. § 63.1-196.3 D.

Section 63.1-196.3, which is set forth in full in the Appendix to this opinion, does require the sectarian centers to meet several requirements but these requirements are minimal and consist mainly of compliance with generally applicable health and safety standards related to human occupancy and use of physical facilities. In lieu of applying for and securing a license, the sectarian institutions have merely to file with the Commissioner of the Department of Social Services an initial and thereafter annual statement of intent to operate a child care center; certify that they have disclosed to all parents or guardians of enrolled children the qualifications of the staff personnel; present documentation of their tax-exempt status and of their compliance with local health and fire ordinances and with certain staff ratio requirements; and make public disclosure of certain aspects of their operations. If an exempt center fails to file the required statement of intent, the Commissioner may take "such action as he determines appropriate," including a suit to enjoin its operation. § 63.1-196.3 B. If a parent or guardian lodges a complaint with any local welfare, health, or fire department related to an exempt center's failure to comply with generally applicable health and safety regulations, those local agencies may inspect the center's facilities and take "appropriate action as provided by law, including a suit to enjoin the operation of the child-care center." § 63.1-196.3 C. These are the only official inspection and enforcement mechanisms provided for the exempt centers. In contrast to the nonsectarian centers, no state level inspection or enforcement mechanisms beyond that related to the filing statement requirement are provided for operation of the exempt centers.

A major revision of the minimum standards was initiated in 1982 when the Governor's Regulatory Reform Advisory Board selected the Department of Social Services for review of its regulations. In response to the Board's action, the Division of Licensing in the Department of Social Services developed a work plan for the evaluation of the Minimum Standards for Licensed Child Care Centers which was approved by the Governor in February 1983.

Over the next six months, the Division reviewed the child care center standards and submitted a report to the Governor's Advisory Board concerning them. In January 1984, the Division initiated a formal revision process by notifying all licensed centers and other interested parties that a revision of the standards was underway. It also formulated an ad hoc advisory committee of 21 members representing directors of child care centers, state and local government officials, specialists in child care development, and other interested community leaders. The ad hoc advisory committee reviewed the standards and recommended that certain standards be revised. The Division of Licensing prepared a rough draft of revisions in April 1984. That draft was reviewed by the ad hoc advisory committee, after which the Division formulated a preliminary draft for circulation to licensed centers and others for review and comment in June 1984.

After the informal comment period, the Division and the ad hoc advisory committee reviewed the comments and recommended final revisions. In November 1984, the Commissioner of the Department of Social Services sent draft revised minimum standards to the State Board of Social Services recommending that the draft be made the subject of formal public comment. The Board in turn approved the draft for public comment and public hearing. After the public comment and public hearing process, the Division of Licensing revised the draft a last time, submitted it for approval to the Governor's Regulatory Reform Advisory Board and the Department of Planning and Budget and once again to the State Board of Social Services. The revised standards were adopted by the State Board of Social Services on October 17, 1985, effective April 1, 1986.[4]

As noted by the Fourth Circuit at 728 F.2d 236, the sectarian centers are totally relieved of official state regulation in the areas of licensing itself, and of program, insurance, financial resources and management, staff qualification, and internal administration following licensure, while the nonsectarian centers are subject to extensive regulation in these areas, enforceable by state agency inspection and legal sanctions. Sectarian centers have only limited disclosure and certification requirements and no sanctions exist as they do for nonsectarian centers.

[4] The minimum standards are located in the Appendix to this opinion. They can be summarized as follows: Part I—Introduction provides definitions, legal base, purpose and applicability of the standards. Part II—Administration explains sponsorship and operational, financial, and recordkeeping responsibilities. Part III—Personnel includes qualifications, health requirements, training, and personnel record requirements. Part IV—Supervision sets forth guidelines and ratio requirements. Part V—Physical Environment explains requirements regarding space, furnishings, equipment as well as requirements to insure safety, health and comfort. Part VI—Programs and Services deals with admission policies and procedures, health care, behavior management, food services, activities, and communication with parents. Part VII—Emergencies deals with training, equipment and procedures for emergencies.

In the area of health and safety, sectarian centers are also relieved of a wide range of regulatory standards which still apply to nonsectarian centers. Sectarian centers are subject only to those health and safety standards already applicable to the general population through local and state fire, safety, and sanitation codes. Nonsectarian centers are subject to state level inspection and enforcement mechanisms while sectarian centers are subject only to the inspection and enforcement powers of local health, welfare, and fire departments acting on complaints of parents.

Facing these differences in state regulation, plaintiffs brought this suit seeking a declaration that the exemption is unconstitutional and an injunction compelling application of the licensing provisions to all child care centers.

Issues on Remand

In its first decision on the merits, the Fourth Circuit stated that the test of whether the exemption "impermissibly favors 'religion over non-religion' " is the three-part test set forth in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971). Under that test, a statute is unconstitutional if it lacks a secular purpose, or if it has the primary effect of advancing religion, or if it fosters excessive governmental entanglement with religion. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d at 238, citing Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. at 612-13, 91 S.Ct. at 2111. The state argued that the exemption statute advanced the secular purpose of accommodating the free exercise rights of church-run child care centers. Whether the asserted purpose justified the exemption, the Fourth Circuit concluded, would be determined by "whether and to what extent the free exercise rights accommodated by the exemption did in fact exist." Id. at 239.

Nothing in the Supreme Court's decision of Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29

(1985), affects the Fourth Circuit's analysis of the focal issue. In that case, the Court applied the three-prong test of Lemon v. Kurtzman to determine whether a state statute authorizing a period of silence for meditation or voluntary prayer violated the establishment clause. With respect to the secular purpose test, the Court stated "it is appropriate to ask 'whether government's actual purpose is to endorse or disapprove of religion,'" citing Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion in Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 104 S.Ct. 1355, 1368, 79 L.Ed.2d 604 (1984). Lynch v. Donnelly also looked to Lemon for controlling law. In her concurrence, Justice O'Connor wrote:

> The purpose prong of the Lemon test asks whether government's actual purpose is to endorse or disapprove of religion. The effect prong asks whether, irrespective of government's actual purpose, the practice on review in fact conveys a message of endorsement or disapproval. An affirmative answer to either question should render the challenged practice invalid.

465 U.S. at 690, 104 S.Ct. at 1368. It is clear from this statement that Justice O'Connor's question is but another way of asking whether the challenged statute has a secular or a religious purpose. This Court does not read Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Lynch v. Donnelly or the decision in Wallace v. Jaffree to reject or modify the secular purpose requirement.

Moreover, the Court in Wallace v. Jaffree specifically addressed the state's claim that the statute at issue served the secular purpose of accommodating religion. The Court concluded that that contention should be resolved by determining whether there was a need to relieve individuals from a government requirement because the requirement impeded their free exercise of religion. Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. at 57-58 n. 45, 105 S.Ct. at 2491 n. 45. That is precisely the analysis applied by the Fourth Circuit in its February 1984 decision in this case and the issue before this Court on remand. This Court concludes that Wallace v. Jaffree does not make any change in the pertinent law involved in this proceeding.

Accordingly, the issue before this Court is whether and to what extent free exercise rights expressed in exempt activities would be burdened by the application of the state's minimum standards for licensed child care centers to church-run centers and, if so, whether that burden is nevertheless justified by a compelling state interest.

A. Class Certification

Pursuant to the mandate of the Fourth Circuit in Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d 230, defendant-intervenors filed a motion to certify a class. Evidence was heard and the Court conditionally certified the class pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(a), 23(b)(3), and 23(c)(1), naming defendant-intervenors as class representative. After notice was given to the class members, identified as all sectarian child care centers currently exempt under Virginia Code § 63.1-196.3 and all sectarian child care centers that have applied for such an exemption, and responses were received, the Court found that Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements were satisfied and granted class certification.

The Court found that there exists a class of all religious institutions which operate or conduct child care centers, and which have been exempted from state licensure pursuant to § 63.1-196.3 of the Code of Virginia, or have filed documentation with defendant Lukhard indicating their intent to obtain such an exemption. Defendant-intervenors Grace Baptist Church, Berean Baptist Church, Tabernacle Baptist Church, and The Rock Church are members of this class.

The Court found that Rule 23(a) requirements were met. First, the number of sectarian child care centers that belong to the class renders joinder of all such centers in this action impracticable, satisfying the requirement of Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(1). Second, there are questions of law and fact concerning the burden that would be imposed on religious beliefs by state licensure of child care centers under the minimum standards, the state's interest in regulating such centers, and the least restrictive means of satisfying the state's interests that are common to the class, satisfying Rule 23(a)(2). Third, the free exercise claims and defenses of the class representatives are typical of the claims and defenses of the class, satisfying Rule 23(a)(3). Finally, the class representatives more than fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class, satisfying Rule 23(a)(4).

Questions of law and fact common to the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of this matter, satisfying Rule 23(b)(3). On this basis, the Court unconditionally certified the class with the defendant-intervenors, as class representative, charged with the task of presenting evidence to establish "the extent of any free exercise rights had by the sectarian institutions in the exempted activities. . . ." 728 F.2d at 246.

B. Standing

The issue of plaintiffs' standing, although resolved in an earlier stage of the proceedings, was raised by defendant-intervenors during the proceedings before this Court. As discussed in the procedural history, plaintiffs appealed to the Fourth Circuit following the District Court's granting a motion to dismiss for lack of standing in 1980. The Fourth Circuit vacated and remanded the case, directing plaintiffs to "allege 'specific, concrete facts demonstrating that the challenged practices harm' them and that they 'personally would benefit in a tangible way from the Court's intervention,' " citing Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 508, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2210, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975). That Court further noted that "submission of the proffered evidence and the particulars of the secular centers' actual financial loss, if any, would be appropriate before a decision about standing is made." Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, No. 80-1272, slip op. at 3-4 (4th Cir. Jan. 9, 1981) [642 F.2d 448 (table)].

After plaintiffs supported their complaint with affidavits, the state's renewed motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of standing was denied. The District Court then upheld the constitutionality of the statute, but the Fourth Circuit vacated the summary judgment for the state, and remanded the case, concluding that "summary judgment might properly be granted to the nonsectarian plaintiffs on the present record." 728 F.2d at 233. Although the Fourth Circuit notes that "[n]o question of standing is now raised," that Court would not have been willing to grant summary judgment for the plaintiffs had the standing issue not been resolved in plaintiffs' favor. The summary judgment record, including the affidavits of financial injury, was the basis of the Fourth Circuit's decision that plaintiffs were entitled to summary judgment but for the decision to remand to allow intervention by a class of sectarian child care centers that could demonstrate the extent of any free exercise rights in the exempted activities. In the November 21 hearing on several motions filed by defendant-intervenors, this Court ruled that the issue had been resolved, noting that the requisite injury had been shown by the plaintiffs.

C. Free Exercise Claims of Defendant-Intervenors

The tests to be applied to the churches' free exercise claims were set forth in Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d at 240-41. First, "the freedom to act upon religious beliefs—to engage in religious activity—is not absolute, as is the right to hold those beliefs; activity may be curtailed in some circumstances for the protection of sufficiently compelling societal interests. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 300-04, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940)." The Fourth Circuit continues, "Whether state law impinges at all upon free exercise rights first depends upon whether 'the purpose or effect of [the] law is to impede the observance of . . . religion.' (citations omitted). Whether, in turn, the holding or active expression of particular beliefs involves the observance of 'religion' depends upon the sincerity of the beliefs held and the centrality of those beliefs to an identifiable religious faith or commitment; only those laws that impede the holding or active expression of sufficiently sincere and central religious beliefs impinge upon free exercise rights," citing Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215-19, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1533-35, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972). The Fourth Circuit concludes, "If, under these tests, a particular law does impede 'religious' activity, even indirectly, it violates the free exercise clause, unless the impediment is justified by a compelling state interest arising from some substantial threat to public health, safety, peace, or order, (citations omitted) and is the least restrictive means for protecting the compelling state interest."

The Fourth Circuit also explained the issue of which activities of religious institutions are entitled to free exercise protections, noting first that "it could not be thought . . . that all activities, or at least all 'good works' activities, of concededly religious institutions, are per se 'religious,' hence entitled to free exercise protections. This simply is not the law," Forest Hills, 728 F.2d at 242-43, citing Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 674, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1414, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970). The explanation continues. "The rule instead is that some activities of undoubtedly 'religious' institutions may fall completely outside the realm of protected 'religion,' notwithstanding their undoubted legitimacy or manifest social value." Regarding this case, the Fourth Circuit concludes, "Neither, obviously, does the whole sweep of exempt activities here lie so manifestly at the core of religious practices—such as prayer, worship, and ritual—as to be entitled per se to protection." 728 F.2d at 243. See also id. at 246, n. 18, where the Fourth Circuit states that this Court must make a "general identification of those activities that are 'religious' and those that are not under free exercise doctrine," concededly involving "line-drawing between 'religious' and 'secular' activities of the sectarian child care center operations. . . ."

The Court notes first in considering this issue that while it is bound by the factual matters stipulated to by the parties, it is not bound by any stipulations of legal conclusions. See Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473 (9th Cir. 1986); Saviano v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 765 F.2d 643 (7th Cir. 1985). Therefore, to the extent the stipulations filed by the parties constitute factual matters, the Court incorporates those into its findings of fact found throughout this opinion. The specific statements that the Court considers to be conclusions of law rather than findings of fact are those statements in paragraphs 5 and 10 that the operation of child care centers by two of the defendant-intervenors is in each case a "part of its ministry." The Court also notes that paragraphs 18-21 of the stipulations are no longer applicable to the case since Shenandoah Baptist opted out of the class. With these corrections, the Court hereby incorporates the stipulations into its findings of fact.

Regarding the issue of whether the operation of child care centers by class members is a part of their respective ministries, this Court concludes that while the class members may characterize this activity as a part of their ministries, the Court is not bound to accept this characterization. Applying the tests set forth by the Fourth Circuit, the Court concludes that the operation of child care centers by these secarian institutions is a secular, and not religious, activity. Therefore, the operation of such centers is not entitled per se to free exercise protection. The operation of a child care center is not an "active expression" of the churches' particular beliefs regarding their ministering to their children but is merely incident to such "active expression."

Although the Court assumes, without making a specific finding, the sincerity of the beliefs of the class, the Court concludes that operating a child care center is not an "active expression" of any centrally held religious beliefs of the class.

Although there are approximately 215 sectarian child care centers that are either exempted under Va. Code § 63.1-196.3 or have applied to be exempted, at least 106 church-run centers have chosen to obtain licenses rather than exemptions. While this is not conclusive, it is probative of whether operating a child care center is an active expression of centrally held religious beliefs. In addition, two defendant-intervenors—Berean Baptist and Tabernacle Baptist—applied for and accepted licenses for a period of time during the 1970's, indicating that there was no free exercise problem at that time. Moreover, child care centers are of recent origin, their numbers increasing during the 1970's as more mothers began to work outside the home. It would appear that sectarian groups, in establishing day care centers, were responding to a secular economic need rather than expanding the scope of their ministries. Despite this conclusion regarding the operation of child care centers by the sectarian institutions, this Court examines below the particular requirements the defendant-intervenors claim would impinge their free exercise rights.

1. The Licensing Requirement

The defendant-intervenors' central free exercise claim focuses on the licensing requirement itself. Virginia Code § 63.1-196 requires any operator of a child care center to obtain a license from the Commissioner of the Department of Social Services and to post that license in a conspicuous place on the premises. In the view of the churches, accepting a license from the state (1) requires that they acknowledge the lordship of the state over Jesus Christ and (2) gives the state the right to say whether a church-run child care center can exist.

The state may regulate the secular activities of religious organizations as long as it does not infringe on the exercise of religious beliefs. Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943). The Supreme Court has recognized that the state's power to regulate secular activities of religious organizations extends to private, religious schools. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925). Courts have upheld licensing requirements for church-run child care centers in four other states. Department of Social Services v. Emmanuel Baptist Pre-School, 150 Mich. App. 254, 388 N.W.2d 326, 330 (1986); North Carolina v. Fayetteville Street Christian School, 42 N.C. App. 665, 258 S.E.2d 459 (1979), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 299 N.C. 351, 261 S.E.2d 908, vacated and remanded on other grounds following rehearing, 299 N.C. 731, 265 S.E.2d 387, appeal dismissed, 449 U.S. 807, 101 S.Ct. 55, 66 L.Ed.2d 11 (1980); Kansas ex rel O'Sullivan v. Heart Ministries, Inc., 227 Kan. 244, 607 P.2d 1102 (1980); Kansas ex rel Pringle v. Heritage Baptist Temple Inc., 236 Kan. 544, 693 P.2d 1163 (1985); Texas v. Corpus Christi People's Baptist Church, Inc., 683 S.W.2d 692 (Tex. 1984); Roloff Evangelistic Enterprises, Inc. v. Texas, 556 S.W.2d 856 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), appeal dismissed, 439 U.S. 803, 99 S.Ct. 58, 58 L.Ed.2d 96, rehearing denied, 439 U.S. 998, 99 S.Ct. 601, 58 L.Ed.2d 672 (1978).

As stated above, this Court concludes that the operation of a child care center, even by a church, is a secular activity not entitling it to free exercise protection. Thus, requiring a church-run child care center to obtain a license to participate in such a secular activity does not burden the free exercise of religion by that church.

The defendant-intervenors' views on licensing did not prevent two of them—Berean Baptist and Tabernacle Baptist—from applying for and accepting licenses for a period in the 1970's. Neither church raised a free exercise objection to the licensure requirement during their period of licensed operation. As the pastors of these churches went through the evolutionary process of acquiring spiritual and political maturity, their institutional positions changed. Their churches went from a position of compliance with the state's mandated licensing requirements to a view that such requirements were an intrusion by the state into their ministries and indeed an attempt by the state to license the pulpit.[5]

What prompted Berean Baptist to return its license and apparently what concerns the other churches as well was a concern that the state can arbitrarily deny a license to a church-run center. This concern is unfounded as a matter of fact and of law. There was no evidence that the state had ever arbitrarily acted to restrict the ability of church-run child care centers to operate their programs according to the mandates of their religious beliefs. Moreover, the churches' concerns are fully addressed by the procedural, statutory and constitutional safeguards that govern the state's conduct with respect to licensing. First, the Administrative Process Act, Va. Code § 9—6.-14:1 et seq., and the Public Participation

[5] See defendant-intervenors' exhibit 18, an excerpt from Dr. Rodney Bell's Bible, which contains his notation: "6/2/78 2:33 a.m. Here I stand! I can do no other. The State of Va. will not license this pulpit! 'By the Grace of God!' I will 'Rot in Jail First.' R. Bell."

Process govern the promulgation of standards for a licensed facility. The record establishes that the state met and exceeded these requirements when promulgating the standards now in effect. Second, the Division of Licensing may revoke or deny a license to an applicant only when it determines that the applicant does not substantially meet the requirements for a license. Third, an applicant whose license is denied or revoked is entitled to appeal that decision in accordance with the Administrative Process Act and may continue to operate during the pendency of such an appeal. Next, the applicant may appeal an adverse decision from an administrative hearing to the Circuit Court, pursuant to Va. Code §§ 63.1-180 and 63.1-213. In addition, the state's conduct is subject to the due process requirements of the United States and Virginia Constitutions. Thus, the state is not free to arbitrarily decide that a particular church-run child care center can or cannot exist.

The Court concludes that the act of licensing a church-run child care center to certify compliance with health, safety and welfare standards would not burden the church's free exercise of religion and would not empower the state to arbitrarily deny a license to an applicant on the basis of the applicant's religion or on any other ground.

Even assuming arguendo that the operation of a child care center is a religious activity rather than a secular activity, entitling it to free exercise protection, the licensure requirement's impediment of the free exercise of this activity is justified by the compelling state interest in protecting the health and safety of children and is the least restrictive means for protecting this interest.

The state's compelling interest in protecting the health and safety of children, particularly those under the age of five, in child care outside the home is clear. Indeed, the churches acknowledge the state's compelling interest in this regard.

The state's licensing standards are directed to the protection and promotion of the physical well-being of children in child care outside the home. The minimum standards focus predominantly on the quality of a center's physical facilities and environment, the provision of trained adult supervision sufficient in number for the ages and number of children at the center, the provision of nutritious meals, and the protection of children's health. Although these standards are more detailed in breadth and scope than the requirements imposed upon exempt centers under the exemption statute, they reflect the same basic objective of promoting the health and welfare of children in child care. The churches do not object to the imposition of the requirements contained in the exemption statute or other state regulations aimed at protecting the health and safety of children. Indeed, most of the pastors who testified would not object if the requirements of the minimum standards, with the exception of the specific requirements to which they object, were imposed upon them as part of the exemption statute requirements. The licensing requirement is a reasonable way of assuring and informing consumers that all child care centers in the state meet these standards.

The state's licensing process is the least restrictive means of assuring that all children placed in child care are served in a safe, fit and nurturing environment. If a state is prohibited from acting prospectively to ensure compliance with minimum standards designed to protect children, and is only allowed to act after finding a violation of those standards, the state's effort to prevent physical and emotional harm to children would be seriously eroded. The state would only be able to act after the damage is done. Certification of compliance with minimum standards in advance of the provision of child care services is the only way the state can prevent harm to children in child care centers. Thus, even assuming that the licensure requirement burdens the free exercise of religion, that burden is permissible under the First Amendment.

2. The Financial Disclosure Requirement.

Virginia Code § 63.1-198 requires the Commissioner of the Department of Social Services to investigate the financial responsibility of an applicant for a child care center license. The minimum standards require an applicant to submit "a projected budget detailing expected income and expenses at the proposed center for the first year of operation; and a complete balance sheet showing separately the current assets committed to, and current liabilities charged against, the proposed center." See Minimum Standards, § 2.7(1) and (2).

The Court concludes that requiring a church-run child care center to submit a statement of estimated expenditures and revenues and of assets and liabilities, prior to its first year of operation would not burden a church's free exercise of religion. The information requested by the state on its one-page financial disclosure form represents a minimal intrusion into the financial affairs of one secular activity conducted by a church—its child care center—while serving the purpose of assuring a center's financial ability to comply with the standards.

Moreover, even assuming that the operation of a child care center is a religious activity, entitling it to free exercise protection, the financial disclosure requirement is justified by the state's compelling interest in the protection of children. In addition, this requirement is the least restrictive means for protecting this interest.

This requirement serves the purpose of insuring that a new child care center will be able to operate in compliance with the minimum standards for at least one year despite the heavy start-up costs of a new center. Resources must be available to assure adequate care and protection of the children during the first year of operation. As explained in a Division of Licensing Programs document, "Issuing a license to a facility that lacks the financial ability to meet the standards could pose a serious threat to the well-being of children in care. This risk can be avoided by identifying the problem before it occurs and by delaying licensure until the sponsor has the necessary resources."

The churches argue that the state does not need this information since they would subsidize their child care centers to stay in operation. This fact would support a showing of financial ability to operate, but it does not obviate the state's concern that such ability be demonstrated.

This requirement is clearly the least restrictive means for protecting the state's interest. The financial information is requested only at the beginning of a center's operation, unless a center demonstrates an inability to comply with the minimum standards at a later date that might be caused by financial problems. The record here indicates that the two churches whose centers were licensed during the 1970's complied with the financial disclosure requirements without objection when they first applied for their licenses. The record also indicates that financial information was not requested after their initial application. Finally, the information requested by the state is less detailed in form and substance than the information churches are required to provide on the application for an exemption for taxation under Internal Revenue Code § 501(c)(3).

Thus, the Court concludes that the financial disclosure requirements do not interfere with the free exercise of religion, serve the state's compelling interest in protecting children by ensuring financial ability to operate and comply with the minimum standards, and are the least restrictive means for establishing this ability.

3. The Prohibition of Corporal Punishment

Section 6.20 of the Minimum Standards provides:

> "There shall be no physical punishment or disciplinary action administered to the body such as, but not limited to, spanking; forcing a child to assume an uncomfortable position (e.g., standing on one foot, keeping arms raised above or horizontal to the body); restraining to restrict movement through binding or tying; enclosing in a confined space, box, or similar cubical; or using exercise as punishment."

The churches' objection to this section is based on the Biblical command "Spare the rod, spoil the child."

The Court concludes that requiring a church-affiliated child care center to refrain from corporal punishment does not burden the free exercise of religion by that church. Because the operation of a child care center is a secular activity, even when conducted by a church, there is no per se entitlement to free exercise protection for all activities conducted within that operation.

Even assuming arguendo either (1) that the operation of a child care center is a religious activity, or (2) that to the extent a church-run child care center believes it is commanded by the Bible to use spanking as a form of punishment, the prohibition against corporal punishment would burden that church's free exercise of religion, the corporal punishment prohibition's burden on free exercise is justified by the compelling state interest. The Court concludes that the state has a clear and compelling interest in protecting young children in care away from home from physical and emotional harm. That interest is served by prohibiting physical punishment which risks serious physical and mental harm and child abuse, without fostering the development of self-discipline. The record clearly establishes the state's concerns. Spanking a child on the bottom with a hand or object can cause welts, bruises or bleeding depending on the degree of force used. If the spanking is particularly forceful, it can cause permanent, internal damage to the muscles of the buttocks. Blows to the buttocks may cause damage to bones, nerves and even the genitals. Corporal punishment teaches children that aggressive physical behavior is a viable means to resolve problems with other people.

The record also reflects the state's concern that corporal punishment is closely associated with child abuse, a serious problem that has received nationwide public attention in recent years. Indeed, the state's concern about child abuse is so serious that it has enacted a statute requiring any adult responsible for the care of a child away from home to report any known or suspected incidents of child abuse to public authorities. Even some of the churches that object to the prohibition of corporal punishment believe that it should be used sparingly under strict limitations. Thus they have strictly limited the instances in which they permit the use of corporal punishment by requiring prior parental consent, limiting its use to designated staff and requiring the presence of another adult.

Where religious practices risk or endanger the health and well-being of members of society, the state may regulate such practices to avoid the adverse health consequences. See, e.g., Kansas ex rel. Pringle v. Heritage Baptist Temple, Inc., 236 Kan. 544, 549-550, 693 P.2d 1163 (1985); Department of Social Services v. Emmanuel Baptist Pre-School, 388 N.W.2d at 334. The prohibition of corporal punishment in child care centers is precisely such an instance. The Court concludes that the state's prohibition against corporal punishment is justified by a compelling state interest in protecting young children from physical and emotional harm. No other method of preventing the harm from occurring is available to achieve this interest. Thus, this prohibition may be applied to church-run centers despite the possible burden on their religious conduct.

Moreover, a church subject to licensure could seek a variance from the Department of Social Services to permit it to use corporal punishment under appropriately defined circumstances acceptable to the state. That would permit the state to ensure that centers using corporal punishment because of their religious beliefs do so in ways that minimize the risks associated with corporal punishment.

4. Child Abuse Reporting Requirements

Virginia Code § 63.1-248.3 requires, inter alia, "any person providing full or part-time child care for pay on a regularly planned basis . . . who has reason to suspect that a child is an abused or neglected child, shall report the matter immediately except as hereinafter provided, to the local department of the county or city wherein the child resides or wherein the abuse or neglect is believed to have occurred." Although the churches have raised objections about the requirement set forth in the minimum standards concerning staff training in procedures for reporting suspected instances of child abuse to the appropriate public authority, the reporting requirement is a statutory requirement that applies to exempt centers without regard to licensing requirements. Moreover, all of the churches recognize the importance of reporting instances of known or suspected child abuse to the appropriate authorities. They object only to being required to do so before they have had an opportunity to "minister" to the family involved. The Court does not see how the reporting requirement prevents churches from ministering to the families with child abuse problems. The state's overriding interest in stopping child abuse and preventing additional harm overrides any minimal burden a church staff might suffer on account of the reporting requirements. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the reporting requirements do not burden the churches' free exercise of religion, are justified by a compelling state interest in protecting children from physical harm and abuse, and are the least restrictive means available for protecting this interest.

5. The "Good Moral Character" Requirement

Virginia Code § 63.1-198 requires the Commissioner to investigate the character and reputation of an applicant for a child care center license. In furtherance of that requirement, Section 3.1 of the Minimum Standards provides that no staff member "shall have been convicted of a felony or misdemeanor related to abuse, neglect, or exploitation of children or adults" and that all staff shall be "of good moral character and reputation." See also Part 2, Article 1, Section 2.3 of the Minimum Standards. The churches object to these requirements because they believe in the fact that a "person can be regenerated, born again, have a new beginning." The churches believe that they should be free to determine whether a person has been born again and should be hired in the child care center. According to the churches' view, the minimum standards would prevent them from hiring the Apostle Paul. With one exception, the churches do not assert that any of their present personnel would be barred from employment by the minimum standards, and the Division would not object to the employment of that individual. The minimum standards encompass only felonies and misdemeanors related to the abuse, neglect or exploitation of children and adults.

The churches express three fears: (1) that the state would prevent them from applying a stricter test of character than set forth in the standards; (2) that the state might prevent them from hiring an individual whom they deemed to be of good moral character but who might not be deemed to be of good moral character by the state; or (3) that the state might compel them to hire someone they believed lacked good moral character.

To the extent that the churches would impose a stricter test of good moral character than the state does, there is nothing in the standards to suggest that the state could or would prohibit them from doing so. Thus, that objection does not raise a free exercise concern. To the extent that a church might want to hire someone whose previous conduct suggests a lack of good moral character but whose subsequent conduct in the church's view evidences good moral character because the individual has been converted and since lived an exemplary Christian life, there is nothing in the minimum standards to suggest that a church would be prevented from hiring such a person. Moreover, this Court will not presume that the Department of Social Services would apply the minimum standards so as to preclude hiring such an individual or that it would deny a request for a variance by a church-run center to hire someone the church has determined has good moral character, despite prior conduct that might suggest the contrary.

The Court must also reject the contention that the good moral character standard would enable the state to compel a church-affiliated child care center to hire someone the church felt lacked good moral character. In particular, the churches fear that the state might seek to compel a church to hire a homosexual, even if the church believed homosexuality is immoral. Their fear is based on the fact that the state has a policy against discrimination against homosexuals in public school employment. The fact that the state does not discriminate against homosexuals in public school employment does not support the churches' contention that the Division of Licensing Programs of the Department of Social Services could compel a private child care center that receives no public funding to hire a homosexual. The minimum standards contain no provision that would require a licensed center to hire someone it did not want to hire. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the good moral character requirements do not impermissibly burden the free exercise of religion by these centers.

6. Program Requirements

Section 6.28 of the Minimum Standards requires licensed centers to provide "experiences which promote growth, well-being, and the appropriate development of growth and fine motor skills; language skills; cognitive skills; social and emotional skills; positive self-concept, curiosity, interest and exploration." The churches fear that the minimum standards would permit the state to impose program content requirements that reflect a secular humanism philosophy, a philosophy they believe is incompatible with their religious beliefs. The minimum standards do not regulate the substantive content of a child care center's program, however. The standards concerning programming and activities are designed to foster the physical and mental development of children by encouraging centers to provide a broad range of activities, without directing the content or substance of such activities. No evidence was presented at trial to suggest that the state has used the licensing process and applied the standards to direct, limit or regulate the religious content or teachings of any child care program subject to the minimum standards. None of the church-run centers that were licensed during the 1970's indicated that the state sought to affect the religious content of their child care programs or to impose its own religious views on the programs of the church run centers. In fact, two of the plaintiffs include religious material—through Bible readings and prayer—in their programs. Therefore, the Court concludes that the risk that the state would interfere with the religious content and program of a church-run child care center is remote and speculative. Thus, there is no basis to conclude that application of the standards to church-run centers would burden their free exercise of religion or impose contrary religious views on their programs.

Section 6.34(2) of the Minimum Standards requires licensed centers to include rhythm, music, and dancing in the daily activities of its program. The churches object to this provision because they are concerned that the state might require them to expose children to rock and roll music and dancing, which they believe to be sinful.

The churches' objections to these specific program standards are based on a concern about the manner in which they might be applied and not on a belief that the state does and would apply the standards to their centers in a manner that would infringe on their free exercise of religion. Thus, the churches object to the standard requiring the promotion of "positive self-concept" because they cannot know "whether the state would interpret . . . these subjective standards in ways that would conflict with our disciplinary philosophy or belief in the depravity of man." The Court finds no basis to conclude that the state would apply the standards at issue in a manner that would interfere with their belief in the depravity of man, or their teaching of that belief in their centers. Similarly, the churches' objection to the rhythm and music standard is premised on the unfounded notion that the state can and would dictate that churches engage in musical activities they believe to be sinful. There is no evidence that the state seeks to do so through the licensing standards at issue. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the churches' objections on these grounds do not establish a free exercise violation.

Conclusion

In accordance with the findings of fact and conclusions of law stated in this opinion, the Court concludes that the statute, Va.Code § 63.1-196.3, lacks a secular purpose and therefore violates the establishment clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. While the statute's avowed secular purpose was to accommodate free exercise rights in the exempted activities, the Court finds no per se entitlement to free exercise protection for the operation of child care centers by sectarian institutions. Moreover, the Court concludes that, even assuming entitlement to free exercise protection for some of the exempted activities, any burden on free exercise is justified in every case by the compelling state interest. Thus, the statute, found by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to be "unconstitutionally overbroad under the establishment clause," cannot be salvaged by defendant-intervenors' attempt to establish free exercise rights.

The Court enjoins the Commissioner of the Department of Social Services of the Commonwealth of Virginia from enforcing Va.Code § 63.1-196.3 and orders general application of the child care licensing provisions to all child care centers.

An appropriate order shall enter.

APPENDIX A

§ 63.1-196.3. Child-care center operated by religious institution exempt from licensure; annual statement and documentary evidence required; enforcement; injunctive relief.—A. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this chapter, a child-care center operated or conducted under the auspices of a religious institution shall be exempt from licensure as required by § 63.1-196. Such religious institution shall file with the Commissioner of Welfare, prior to beginning any such operation and thereafter annually, a statement of intent to operate a child-care center, certification that the child-care center has disclosed to the parents or guardians of the children in the center the qualifications of the personnel employed therein and documentary evidence that:

1. Such religious institution has tax exempt status as a nonprofit religious institution in accordance with § 501 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, or that the real property owned and exclusively occupied by the religious institution is exempt from local taxation.

2. Within the prior ninety days, the local health department and local fire marshal or Office of the State Fire Marshal whichever is appropriate, have inspected the physical facilities of the child-care center and have determined that the facility is in compliance with applicable laws and regulations with regard to food service activities, health and sanitation, water supply, building codes, the Virginia Fire Safety Regulations or the Uniform Statewide Building Code and local fire requirements.

3. The child-care center employes supervisory personnel according to the following ratio of adults to children:

a. One adult to four children from zero to twenty-four months.

b. One adult to ten children from ages twenty-four months to six years.

c. One adult to twenty-five children ages six years and older.

Each person in a supervisory position shall be certified by a practicing physician to be free from any disability which would prevent him from caring for such children as will be under his supervision.

4. The following aspects of the child-care center's operations are described in a written statement provided to the parents or guardians of the children in the center and made available to the general public: physical facilities, enrollment capacity, food services, health requirements for the staff and public liability insurance.

B. If a religious institution operates a child-care center and does not file the statement and documentary evidence required by paragraph A hereof, the Commissioner shall give reasonable notice to such religious institution of the nature of its noncompliance and may thereafter take such action as he determines appropriate, including a suit to enjoin the operation of the child-care center.

C. Any parent or guardian of a child in a child-care center who has reason to believe that a child-care center falling within the provisions of this section is not in compliance with the requirements of paragraph A of this section may report the same to the local department of welfare, the local health department or the local fire marshal, each of which may inspect the child-care center for noncompliance, give reasonable notice to the religious institution, and thereafter may take appropriate action as provided by law, including a suit to enjoin the operation of the child-care center.

D. Nothing in this section shall prohibit a child-care center operated by or conducted under the auspices of a religious institution from obtaining a license pursuant to chapter 10 (§ 63.1-195 et seq.) of Title 63.1 of the Code. (1979, c. 425.)

Disease	Incubation Period	Common Signs and Symptoms	Recommendations For Exclusion From School
Chickenpox (Varicella)	From 2 to 3 weeks, usually 13 to 17 days.	Sudden onset with slight fever and itchy eruptions which become vesicular (small blisters) within a few hours. Lesions commonly occur in successive crops, with several stages of maturity present at the same time.	Communicable for as long as 5 days before eruption of vesicles and for not more than 6 days after the appearance of the first crop of vesicles. Case: Exclude from school for 7 days after eruption. Avoid exposure to women in early pregnancy. Contacts: On appearance of first sign or symptom, exclude from school for 7 days.
Fifth Disease (Erythema Infectiosum)	From 6-14 days.	Mild illness without fever. Rash characterized by a vivid reddening of the skin especially of the face which fades and recurs; classically, described as a "slapped cheek appearance."	Case: Exclusion from school not required. Contacts: School exclusion not indicated.

German Measles (Rubella)	From 14 to 21 days, usually 16 to 18 days.	Mild symptoms; slight fever, rash of variable character lasting about 3 days; enlarged head and neck lymph glands common. Joint pain may occur especially in older children and adults.	Communicable for 7 days before onset of rash and at least 4 days thereafter. Case: Exclude from school for 7 days after onset of symptoms. Avoid exposure to women in early pregnancy. Check immunization records. Contacts: Those who are pregnant and not immunized should be urged to seek medical advice.
Hepatitis A (Infectious Hepatitis)	From 15 to 50 days, usually 28-30 days.	Fever, loss of appetite, nausea, abdominal discomfort and weakness followed by jaundice. Many unrecognized mild cases without jaundice occur, especially in children.	Communicability greatest from 7 days before to several days after onset of jaundice. Case: Exclude from school until physician advises return. Convalescence may be prolonged. Contacts: School exclusion not indicated.
Impetigo Contagiosa	Unknown.	Multiple skin lesions usually of exopsed areas (e.g., elbows, legs and knees), but may involve any area. Lesions vary in size and shape, and begin as blisters which rapidly mature into brown crusts on a reddened base. Healing from center outwards produces circular areas which may resemble ringworm.	Case: Exclude from school until physician advises return (usually 3-5 days). Contacts: Exclusion from school not indicated. Observe carefully for symptoms.

Disease	Incubation Period	Common Signs and Symptoms	Recommendations For Exclusion From School
Meningitis, Haemophilus	Usually 2-4 days.	Sudden onset of fever, vomiting, lethargy and stiff neck. Progressive stupor or coma are common.	Case: Exclude from school until physician advises return. Contacts: School exclusion not indicated. Observe carefully for symptoms, especially fever. Parents of day care center/nursery school contacts should be advised to check with their childrens physicians concerning prophylactic treatment with rifampin.
Meningitis, Meningococcal	From 2 to 10 days, usually 3 to 4 days.	Sudden onset of fever and intense headache. Delirium and coma often appear early; a characteristic (measles like) rash usually follows. Often fatal despite prompt disgnosis and treatment.	Case: Exclude from school during acute illness. (Non-communicable after 24 hours of appropriate drug therapy.) Contacts: School exclusion not indicated. Intimate (household) contacts should be urged to seek their physician's advice concerning prophylactic treatment with rifampin.
Infectious Mononucleosis (Glandular Fever)	Usually 4 to 6 weeks.	Fever, sore throat and enlarged lymph glands of the back of the neck. Generally mild illness and difficult to recognize in children.	Case: Exclude from school until physician advises return. Contacts: School exclusion not indicated.

Mumps (Infectious Paronns)	From 2 to 3 weeks, usually 18 days.	Fever with swelling and tenderness of the parotid glands located below and in front of one or both ears. Unrecognized mild cases without swelling may occur.	Communicable from 6 days before swelling until 9 days after. Case: Exclude from school until swelling disappears (usually 9 days). Contacts: School exclusion not indicated.
Pediculosis (Lice)	Under optimum conditions, eggs hatch in 7 days and reach maturity in about 14 days.	Severe itching and scratching, often with secondary infection. Scalp, and hairy portions of body may be affected. Eggs of head lice (nits) attach to hairs as small, round, gray lumps.	Case: Exclude from school until treated by a physician. Contacts: Direct inspection of head, body, and clothing recommended. School exclusion not indicated in absence of infestation.
Measles (Rubeola, Red Measles)	From 8-13 days, usually 10 days.	Prodrome characterized by fever followed by reddened eyes, runny nose, and cough. Dusky-red blotchy rash appears on day 3 or 4 and lasts 4 to 7 days.	Communicable from beginning of prodromal period to 4 days after appearance of the rash. Case: Exclude from school until at least 4 days after appearance of the rash. Contacts: Check immunication records. Exclude from school immediately on signs of prodrome.
Salmonellosis	From 6 to 72 hours, usually 12 to 36 hours.	Sudden onset of fever, abdominal pain, diarrhea, nausea, and frequent vomiting. Dangerous dehydration may occur in younger children.	Stools usually positive for Salmonella for several days to several weeks; occasional patients positive for several months. Case: Exclude from school during acute illness (usually 5 to 7 days). Contacts: School exclusion and stool cultures not indicated in absence of symptoms.

Disease	Incubation Period	Common Signs and Symptoms	Recommendation For Exclusion From School
Scabies	From 2 to 6 weeks.	Begins as itchy raised areas or burrows around finger webs, wrists, elbows, armpits, belt-line, and/or genitals. Extensive scratching often results in secondary infection.	Case: Exclude from school until physician advises return. Contacts: Direct inspection of body. School exclusion not indicated in absence of infestation.
Scarlet Fever	Usually 1 to 3 days, rarely longer.	Fever, sore throat, exudative tonsillitis or pharyngitis. Rash appears most often on neck, chest, and skin folds of arms, elbows, groin and inner aspect of thighs.	Case: Exclude from school during acute illness (usually 7 to 10 days). Non-communicable after 24 hours of appropriate drug therapy. Contacts: Exclude from school on appearance of signs of symptoms. Culturing of school contacts and treatment of carriers not usually indicated.
Shigellosis (Bacillary Dysentery)	From 1 to 7 days, usually 3 days.	Diarrhea, fever and often vomiting and cramps, in severe cases the stools may contain blood.	Infected cases contagious as long as stools are positive. Case: Exclude from school during acute illness and until cultures of feces are negative. (Other children in the family should be cultured. Children who have positive cultures should be excluded until their cultures are negative). Contacts: School exclusion not indicated. Stool cultures indicated only in suspected school outbreaks.

Whooping Cough (Pertussis)	Usually 7 days, almost uniformly within 10 days, and not exceeding 21 days.	Catarrhal stage begins with upper respiratory symptoms and increasingly irritating cough. The paroxysmal stage usually follows within 1 to 2 weeks, and lasts 1 to 2 months. Paroxysmal stage is characterized by repeated episodes of violent cough broken by a high-pitched inspiratory whoop. Older school children may not have whoop. Convalescence may require many weeks.	Case: Exclude from school while contagious (usually 2 to 3 weeks, less with antibiotic therapy) and until a physician advises return. Contacts: Search for missed or atypical cases. APPENDIX C

STIPULATIONS

The plaintiffs Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc., Academy Day Care, Inc., and Holloman Child Care Centers, Inc., by counsel, defendant William L. Lukhard, by counsel, and defendant-intervenors Grace Baptist Church, Berean Baptist Church, Tabernacle Baptist Church, and The Rock Church, by counsel, and defendant-intervenors Shenandoah Baptist Church and Pastor Robert L. Alderman, by counsel, submit the following stipulations to be admitted into the evidentiary record in this case.

1. Each of the plaintiffs owns and operates one or more child-care centers in Virginia under license issued by the defendant Lukhard pursuant to Va.Code Section 63.1-196. None of the plaintiffs' centers is operated or conducted under the auspices of a religious institution.

2. Plaintiff Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. is a proprietary corporation that operates a center located in Lynchburg, Virginia.

3. Plaintiff Academy Day Care, Inc. is a non-profit corporation that operates a center in Woodbridge, Virginia.

4. Plaintiff Holloman Child Care Centers, Inc. is a proprietary corporation that operates centers in Hampton and Grafton, Virginia.

5. Defendant-Intervenor Tabernacle Baptist Church ("Tabernacle") operates a child care center in Virginia Beach as part of its ministry. In 1972, Tabernacle considered opening a child care center and contacted state officials to inquire about licensing, which at that time was required of all child care centers under state law. Tabernacle subsequently decided not to pursue a license at that time.

6. Tabernacle contacted the licensing division of the Department of Welfare again in 1976 and was issued a provisional license for a child care center for up to 40 children, ages 2 to 5. After Tabernacle met all the requirements for licensure, a full license was issued it on April 20, 1977. Tabernacle sent a renewal application to the Department of Welfare in May of 1978.

7. On June 2, 1978, Tabernacle returned its license to the Department and advised the Department that it would not accept a renewal license. In its letter to the Department, Tabernacle stated, "[O]ur convictions and beliefs do not allow us to permit anyone but God himself to control, regulate, or dictate to our church. The intrinsic quality or content of licensure is that a higher power may only license a lower power. If we permitted the Commonwealth of Virginia to license the Tabernacle Baptist Church day care center, we believe that we would be giving the state false recognition as a higher power than God himself and this we refuse to do."

8. Between August of 1976 and June of 1978, Tabernacle provided the Department all of the information required in order to establish its compliance with the minimum licensing standards.

9. Tabernacle has operated a nursery and day care center without a license from the state since June 1978. After the General Assembly in 1979 passed House Bill 276 exempting from licensure child care centers operated under the auspices of a religious institution, the Department determined on or about July 29, 1980, that Tabernacle's day care center met the requirements of the exemption statute, Va.Code Section 63.1-196.3. Since the passage of House Bill 276, Tabernacle has filed annually the documents required by the exemption statute.

10. Defendant-Intervenor Berean Baptist Church of Salem, Virginia operates a preschool and kindergarten program as part of its church ministry. In December, 1972, Reverend Rudy Holland, Pastor of Berean, contacted the licensing division of the Department to inquire about the requirements for licensure and was sent the minimum standards for licensed child care centers. Because Berean encountered zoning problems with its facility, it was unable to open its center in the fall of 1973.

11. After its zoning problems were resolved, Berean applied for a license from the state in the summer of 1974, as required at that time by state law. Berean was issued a provisional license for its day care center and kindergarten for forty-five children ages 2 to 12 in September of 1974 and was issued a regular license on October 9, 1974, for a twelve-month period.

12. Berean's license was renewed in December of 1975 and again in January 1977 for a period of six months.

13. In June of 1977, counsel for Berean advised the Department of Welfare that Berean objected to the licensing of its nursery and day care center, stating that "the Berean Christian Academy and Day Care Center is operated as an integral part of the Berean Baptist Church of Salem, Virginia. All the ministeries of the Berean Baptist Church are conducted and exist by declaration of the convictional faith of this church. As I am sure you can appreciate, the licensing of the Bureau Christian Academy for day care purposes would require the licensing of an integral ministry of the Bereau Baptist Church." See Defendant-Intervenors' Exhibit 14 Grace Baptist Church, et al.

14. Between July, 1974 and June, 1977, Berean provided the Department of Welfare all of the information required to establish its compliance with the minimum licensing standards.

15. From June, 1977 to the present, Berean has operated its preschool program without a license. On August 17, 1979, the Department of Welfare advised Berean that it had met the statutory requirements of the newly-passed statute exempting Berean and other church-run child care programs from state licensure.

16. Grace Baptist Church of Petersburg, Virginia has operated a child care center exempted from licensure by Va.Code Section 63.1-196.3 since on or about April of 1984. In that time, Grace Baptist Church has complied with the requirements of the exemption statute.

17. The Rock Church in Virginia Beach, Virginia has operated a child care center exempted from licensure by Va.Code Section 63.1-196.3 since August of 1980. In that time, The Rock Church has complied with the requirements of the exemption statute.

18. Defendant-Intervenor Shenandoah Baptist Church ("Shenandoah") operates a preschool in Roanoke County, Virginia as a part of the ministry of the church.

19. In 1973, Shenandoah applied for a license to operate a preschool. Shenandoah was granted a provisional license for the period November 15, 1973 through April 14, 1974, after which a regular license was issued. Shenandoah's preschool remained licensed through February, 1978. During that time period, Shenandoah provided to the Department all of the information required to establish its compliance with the Minimum Licensing Standards.

20. On February 4, 1978, Shenandoah returned its license to the Department of Welfare stating as follows: "Having examined carefully the significance of the licensing procedure of the Department of Welfare in relationship to our children's ministries, we are convinced that we have violated one of our basic Biblical and Constitutional principles in applying for and accepting your license for the purpose of operating a church ministry."

21. Since February, 1978, Shenandoah has conducted its preschool without a license. Since the passage of House Bill 276, Shenandoah has filed documents required by the exemption statute.

22. As of October 31, 1986, there were 837 licensed child care centers in Virginia, 151 exempt centers, and 68 centers that have notified the state of their intention to operate an exempt center. Among the 837 licensed centers, approximately 106 are church-run centers.

RESPONDENTS' BRIEF IN OPPOSITION

COUNTERSTATEMENT OF THE CASE

In 1979, Virginia enacted a statute that exempts all "child care center[s] operated or conducted under the auspices of . . . religious institution[s]" from compliance with the licensing requirements of Virginia Code § 63.1-196. Va. Code § 63.1-196.3 (1979). Under that enactment, a church-run center can exempt itself from the licensing standards by filing a statement of intent to operate an exempt child care center and documentary evidence that it has satisfied certain limited health, safety and fire code requirements and specified staff-child ratios. Church-run child care centers that meet these criteria need not comply with the overwhelming majority of licensing standards applicable to non-exempt centers.

On February 1, 1980, plaintiffs, three non-sectarian child care centers operating under licenses issued by the state, brought this action seeking a declaration that, inter alia, the exemption of church-run child care centers from the state's licensing requirements constitutes an establishment of religion and a denial of equal protection of the laws.[1] The Director of the Department of Social Services of the Commonwealth of Virginia ("the state") defended the exemption as a permissible accommodation of potential free exercise claims of church-run child care centers. No exempt church-run center sought to intervene at that time.

Shortly after plaintiffs filed their complaint, the state moved to dismiss the entire action—including plaintiffs' Establishment Clause claim—for lack of standing. The district court granted the motion because it concluded that plaintiffs' claim of injury depended upon speculation. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 487 F. Supp. 1378 (E.D. Va. 1980). On appeal, the Fourth Circuit concluded that plaintiffs' standing to raise their Establishment Clause and Equal Protection Clause claims could be predicated on financial harm and remanded to allow plaintiffs to amend their complaint and to substantiate their allegations of financial harm by affidavit.

[1] An earlier action filed in September 1979 was dismissed. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 480 F. Supp. 636 (E.D. Va. 1979).

Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 642 F.2d 448 (4th Cir. 1981) ("Forest Hills I").

After plaintiffs amended their complaint, supported by affidavits, the district court denied the state's renewed motion to dismiss for lack of standing. See Order, Aug. 4, 1981. Plaintiffs' subsequent motion for summary judgment, seeking a declaration that the exemption statute violated, inter alia, the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution, was substantiated by the affidavits of Margaret D. Miller, James A. Payne, Frederick Glantz, Paul Boyd, Inez Holloman and Stephen Jones. These were the same affidavits that had supported plaintiffs' standing allegations concerning injury, and they formed a part of the factual record that the Fourth Circuit subsequently found sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to summary judgment. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 728 F.2d 230, 244-45 (4th Cir. 1984) ("Forest Hills II").

On April 22, 1982, on cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court held that the exemption for church-run child care centers had a secular purpose of accommodating potential free exercise claims and thus did not violate the First Amendment. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 540 F. Supp. 1046 (E.D. Va. 1982).

On February 7, 1984, the Fourth Circuit vacated the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of the state and remanded the action for further proceedings in accordance with its opinion. Forest Hills II, 728 F.2d at 247. The court held that "[t]he exemption, on its face, and as a matter of law was overbroad in relation to the secular legislative purpose claimed for it"—the accommodation of free exercise rights of the exempted centers. Id. at 244.

The court concluded that plaintiffs were entitled to the entry of summary judgment. However, the court was reluctant to direct entry of judgment in their favor without determining whether and to what extent free exercise rights justifying the exemption, in whole or in part, did in fact exist. Since there was no evidence in the record bearing on that issue, the court remanded to permit "further evidentiary proceedings . . . devoted to developing . . . the extent of any free exercise rights had by the sectarian institutions in the exempted activities, and the nature and extent of any compelling state interest in nevertheless regulating those activities." Id. at 246. The court "conditionally" denied plaintiffs' request for judgment and remanded the action for the limited purpose of inviting exempt centers, none of which had theretofore sought to intervene, to intervene as a class.

The court directed that if church-run centers failed to satisfy the criteria for a class action or if a class were certified but failed to show the existence of any specific free exercise rights that would be infringed by specific child-care regulations, "the exemption should be declared wholly unconstitutional." Id. at 246.

On remand, a group of four churches, petitioners Grace Baptist Church, Tabernacle Baptist Church, Berean Baptist Church, and The Rock Church ("the intervening churches"), moved to intervene on behalf of a class of church-run centers. Only two other exempt centers filed affirmative responses to the district court's notice, but neither of those centers filed motions to intervene.

The intervening churches filed a motion to certify a class on October 19, 1984. They asserted that the alleged class—all centers that had obtained or filed for exemptions—shared a common belief that a child care program is an integral part of the church ministry, and that any state regulation of a church-run child care center violates the free exercise of religion. On January 17, 1985, the trial court ruled that there was no basis upon which a class could be certified. Accordingly, the court entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. At no time on the first remand did the state or the intervening churches challenge plaintiffs' standing.

On appeal, the state and the intervening churches challenged the merits of the district court's order but did not attack plaintiffs' standing. The Fourth Circuit ruled that the district court, in granting summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, had "denied . . . [the intervening churches] any right to class certification or an opportunity to conduct discovery, or to present evidence." It thus remanded the proceeding a second time for the purposes stated in its first opinion. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 789 F.2d 295, 297 (4th Cir. 1986) ("Forest Hills III").

On remand, the churches joined in a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction challenging plaintiffs' standing to sue on one or more of their claims. The motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction was denied on November 24, 1986.

After a hearing on petitioner Grace Baptist Church's motion to certify a class, the district court certified a class on January 9, 1987. The matter was tried on March 9, 1987. After post trial briefing and argument, the district court ruled that plaintiffs had demonstrated injury to support their standing, entered judgment in their favor and declared the exemption statute unconstitutional. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 661 F. Supp. 300 (E.D. Va. 1987).

On May 6, 1988, the Fourth Circuit affirmed the district court's ruling on standing, relying on Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, —— U.S. ——, 107 S. Ct. 1722, 1726 (1987). The Fourth Circuit reviewed on the merits and held the exemption did not violate the Establishment Clause.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE WRIT

Petitioners contend that the Court should review and reverse the Fourth Circuit's ruling on standing. They argue that the ruling below constitutes an unwarranted extension of Arkansas Writer's Project by granting "standing" to parties who have not suffered injury and who do not fall within the prudential "zone of interests" protected by the Establishment Clause. Petitioners are wrong on both counts. Plaintiff-respondents established in preliminary proceedings and on summary judgment that Virginia's disparate treatment of licensed and exempt centers caused them injury. As a group directly affected by Virginia's differing treatment of non-religious centers, plaintiffs clearly fall within the zone of interests protected by the Establishment Clause.

I. Plaintiffs' Standing Was Resolved in 1981.

Shortly after plaintiffs filed this action in February 1980, the state moved to dismiss the complaint for lack of standing. The district court granted the motion because it found that plaintiffs' claim of injury depended upon speculation. Forest Hills Early Learning Center, Inc. v. Lukhard, 487 F. Supp. 1387 (E.D. Va. 1980). On appeal, the Fourth Circuit concluded that plaintiffs' standing to raise their Establishment Clause and Equal Protection Clause claims could be predicated on financial harm and remanded to allow plaintiffs to support their allegations by affidavit. Forest Hills I.

After plaintiffs amended their complaint and substantiated their allegations by affidavit, the district court denied the state's renewed motion to dismiss for lack of standing. See Order, August 4, 1981. The non-exempt centers' motion for summary judgment, seeking a declaration that the exemption statute violated, inter alia, the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution, was supported by affidavits of Margaret D. Miller, James

A. Payne, Frederick Glantz, Paul Boyd, Inez Holloman and Stephen Jones, the same affidavits that support plaintiffs' standing allegations concerning injury. Those affidavits formed a part of the factual record that the Fourth Circuit found sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to summary judgment. Forest Hills II, 728 F.2d at 233, 244-45. As the district court noted when it found that the exemption statute violated the Establishment Clause, a court would not be willing to grant summary judgment to plaintiffs unless they had successfully satisfied standing requirements in both preliminary proceedings and on summary judgment.

The elements for establishing standing were fully satisfied in this case, as both the district court and the court of appeals concluded. Had the state felt that plaintiffs' evidentiary support for its standing allegations was insufficient to support summary judgment in their favor, it should have opposed plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and cross-moved on that issue. See, e.g., United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669, 689 (1973) (if defendant thought standing allegations untrue, it "should have moved for summary judgment on the standing issue") See also Gwaltney of Smithfield, Ltd. v. Chesapeake Bay Foundation, Inc., No. 86-473, —— U.S. ——, 108 S. Ct. 376, 385-86 (1987); Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 37 n.15 and 46 n.25 (1976); NAACP, Boston Chapter v. Harris, 607 F.2d 514, 526 (1st Cir. 1979). Since the state did not controvert plaintiffs' evidentiary support for their standing allegations on summary judgment, plaintiffs' standing was fully established at that point.

The result reached in Legal Aid Society of Alameda County v. Brennan, 608 F.2d 1319 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 921 (1980), a case cited by petitioners, is instructive. There, the original defendants "did not challenge the factual or legal basis for [plaintiffs'] standing either in their motion to dismiss or in their opposition to [plaintiffs'] motion for partial summary judgment." 608 F.2d at 1333. The appellants, who were permitted to intervene for purposes of appeal, challenged plaintiffs' standing on appeal. The Ninth Circuit ruled that although "the record would be substantially more complete had appellant been called upon to marshall the facts and law in support of standing in response to a timely challenge to standing," the record was sufficient to support standing. Id.

Here, the facts in support of standing are stronger. The state did challenge plaintiffs' standing. Plaintiffs were required to marshall facts and law to support their contentions in opposition to a motion to dismiss and in support of a motion for summary judgment. The Fourth Circuit subsequently determined that the facts presented by plaintiffs were sufficient to support summary judgment in plaintiffs' favor, and only refrained from directing the entry of judgment in their favor to permit churches to show that free exercise rights supported the exemption. Forest Hills II, 728 F.2d at 246-47.

Plaintiffs' standing was not questioned between August 1981, when the district court denied the state's second motion to dismiss, and November 1986, when the churches resurrected the issue on the second remand. The issue was not raised on the appeal decided in Forest Hills II, on the first remand after the churches intervened or on the appeal resolved in Forest Hills III.

Plaintiffs—who had established that they were entitled to judgment unless the exempt centers demonstrated that the child care standards would violate their free exercise of religion—should not be required to relitigate issues with parties that entered the case four years after it began. Petitioners—whose intervention at such a late stage was made possible solely by the Fourth Circuit's invitation to present their free exercise claims—are not free to relitigate issues that were previously resolved or to raise issues beyond the scope of the remand.[2]

II. Plaintiffs Have Standing to Challenge the Exemption As An Impermissible Establishment of Religion.

The Fourth Circuit correctly held that plaintiffs have standing to challenge the exemption statute's constitutionality, consistent with this Court's criteria for standing. They have suffered both religious and economic injury sufficient to establish standing. It is beyond dispute that anyone whose adherence or non-adherence to religion is used to justify disparate government action has standing to challenge that action. As Justice O'Connor has stated, "the Establishment Clause prohibits government from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person's standing in the political community." See Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 687 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring.) As the state and churches have observed, the central purpose of the Establishment Clause is to insure government neutrality in matters of religion. Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437 (1971). By enacting

[2] Even if the scope of the remand had not been expressly confined by the Fourth Circuit, the churches are precluded from relitigating issues resolved before their intervention. As that court has stated, "an intervenor is held to take the case as he finds it." Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co. v. Peninsula Shipbuilders' Ass'n, 646 F.2d 117, 122 (4th Cir. 1981). An intervenor is not free to challenge prior orders or judgments. See, e.g., Paradise v. Prescott, 585 F. Supp. 72, 75 n.4 (M.D. Ala. 1983), aff'd, 767 F.2d 1514 (11th Cir. 1985), aff'd sub nom. United States v. Paradise, 480 U.S. 149 (1987). Rather, he is bound by the "law of the case" doctrine. Gindes v. United States, 740 F.2d 947 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1074 (1984); Dickinson v. Auto Center Mfg. Co., 733 F.2d 1092, 1096 (5th Cir. 1983); Mid-Eastern Electronics, Inc. v. First National Bank, 455 F.2d 141, 143 (4th Cir. 1970). As intervenors who have entered this proceeding following several appeals, the churches are bound by the law of the case regarding plaintiffs' standing. Capital Investors Co. v. Estate of Morrison, 584 F.2d 652, 654 (4th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981 (1979).

the exemption statute, Virginia decided to treat church-run child care centers differently from centers that are not affiliated with a religious institution, even if licensed centers, such as plaintiff Holloman's, provide religious training. This differential treatment was clear to the Fourth Circuit. In 1984, it found:

> that the non-exempt centers had to do no more than hold up the challenged exemption for judicial scrutiny to demonstrate its palpable, facial, non-neutrality in respect of religion; the exempted activities are, by definition, only those of 'religious institutions' and the substantiality of the degree of favor conferred upon religion in relation to non-religion is equally palpable.

Forest Hills II, 728 F.2d at 241 (footnote omitted). The disparate treatment imposed on licensed centers and the substantial degree of favor conferred upon religious centers is precisely the kind of injury that supported standing in cases such as Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, —— U.S. ——, 107 S. Ct. 1722, 1726 (1987); Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464 (1982); Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26 (1976); and Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501 (1975).

In Arkansas Writers Project, for example, the Court held that non-exempt magazines had standing to challenge a statute granting a sales tax exemption granted to other similarly situated magazines. 107 S. Ct. at 1726. The Court emphasized that "we have considered claims that others similarly situated were exempt from the operation of a state law adversely affecting the claimant [in numerous cases]. See, e.g., Armco Inc. v. Hardesty, 467 U.S. 638 104 S. Ct. 2620, 81 L. Ed. 540 (1984); Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 100 S. Ct. 2286, 65 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1980); Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S. Ct. 2286, 33 L. Ed. 2d 212 (1972)." Id.

Similarly, in Valley Forge, the Court concluded that standing may be predicated on either economic injury or "spiritual injury." The Court's indication that "spiritual injury" would confer standing in no way limits standing to plaintiffs claiming such injury. Rather, it serves to emphasize that "injury of any kind, economic or otherwise, [is] sufficient to confer standing." 454 U.S. at 486 (emphasis in text, footnote omitted). The Court in Valley Forge was concerned only that a plaintiff demonstrate more than an interest shared with all citizens that a state faithfully adhere to the Constitution. Id. at 482.

Here, plaintiffs are not simply citizens concerned in the abstract with Virginia's adherence to the Constitution. They are within the group directly subjected to disparate government treatment as a direct consequence of their lack of religious affiliation. Thus, they have a special and far greater interest in challenging the exemption than citizens having only an abstract concern with the state's faithful adherence to the Constitution. They clearly fall within the zone of interests protected by the Establishment Clause. See Valley Forge Christian College, 454 U.S. at 482.

Moreover, a favorable decision for plaintiffs would remedy their injuries. If the statute were declared unconstitutional, the palpable non-neutrality present on the face of the statute would be eliminated. All child care centers, regardless of religious affiliation, would then be treated by the state in the same manner, as they had been for more than thirty years before the exemption was enacted. Thus, as determined seven years ago, plaintiffs have standing to challenge the constitutionality of the exemption statute.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be denied.
